

It's hard being a child sometimes!

Modern children are raised to be kind to others and mostly have very kind parents who explain and reason and make allowances. Unfortunately when children get together in any kind of group environment they are not particularly kind or nice to each other so many children are completely floored and don't know what to do.

A huge part of socialisation is learning to let others be how they are, to stick up for ourselves and maintain good personal boundaries when needed and to accept that we are not as important to everyone else as we are to ourselves. In short we have attitudes to develop, skills to learn, and knowledge to attain. Becoming a well socialised child is not easy in our busy, screen obsessed and adult managed world but it is the way forward to a happier and more confident life.

Every parent would like their child to live in a world where they were treated kindly, affectionately and sensitively by everyone around them but unfortunately in real life this is unlikely to happen. Not because children are mean, most of them aren't, but they are all still learning and growing themselves and don't yet have all the appropriate attitudes, skills and knowledge either.

This workshop will help you provide the support your child needs to manage the choppy world of friendships and relationships - what to say, what not to say and how to grow their thinking, skills and confidence around others

Helping Children Manage the behaviour of others – a workshop for parents

Tuesday 11th February, 7.30pm – 9.30pm, Barnes Primary School – KS1 building

Places cost £17.50 each and booking is essential – go to www.gillhines.co.uk to book

Recent participant feedback for this workshop:

“This will totally change the way I parent – I wish I had been to the workshop sooner”

“I absolutely loved the problem solving choice chart!”

“Excellent insights into the children’s psyche helping you and them to cope with modern world challenges!”

“Gill is very engaging and provides lots of helpful tips which I can’t wait to put into practice”

“Extremely helpful and practical tips to help my child with their playground dramas.”